PRINCE OF WALES IS TO VISIT CRANBROOK

To See Sullivan Mine and Concentrator at Kimberley

Cranbrook, Aug. 15.—The Prince of Wales will "be glad to meet the people of Cranbrook informally," but will not receive an address. Mayor T. M. Roberts has received word to this effect in reply to the city's expressed desire to present a short address.

The Prince will spend twelve hours in the district and will visit the Sullivan mine and concentrator at Kimberley.

AT HIS RANCH

Calgary, Aug. 15.—The Prince of Wales, yesterday morning was back on his ranch at Pekisko after his trip to Edmonton and spent another quiet day as an Alberta rancher.

To-day is the last day the Prince of Wales and Prince George will spend on the ranch during their present trip. The train will leave High River at 6 p.m. for Calgary, where, on their arrival, they will be guests of honor at a dinner given by the officers of the Lord Strathcona Horse (Royal Canadians) in the armories. They will later attend the second annual hunt ball given by the Calgary Drag Hounds, and in the early hours Tuesday morning will leave for Banff, where they are scheduled to arrive at 6 a.m. They will leave Banff for the West at 12:45 p.m. Wednesday.

EDMONTON VISIT
Edmonton, Aug. 15.—The Prince of Wales, Prince George and their party brought their stay in Edmonton to a close at midnight Saturday when they left on the return trip to the E. P. Ranch at High River.

The visit of the princes was characterized by an almost complete absence of formality. Following the ceremony at the Parliament Buildings, when the royal brothers were greeted by a crowd of more than 30,000 people, addresses of welcome were read from the province and city, and Prince George unveiled a memorial tablet, the princes were left largely to their own devices.

Golf was played both morning and afternoon at the Mayfair course, with luncheon at the clubhouse between the rounds. In the morning, despite a drizzle of rain, the Prince of Wales, Prince George and Major Lee, their military secretary, played a threesome. In the afternoon the two princes teamed up in a foursome against Lieutenant-Governor Egbert and Cecil Rutherford, president of the Mayfair Club.

At 6:30 p.m. the royal visitors inspected the memorial hall of the Canadian Legion and chatted with a number of the veterans.

In the evening the princes dined at Government House and later attended an informal dance arranged by Lieutenant-Governor Egbert, also at Government House.

GOVERNMENT THANKED

Ottawa, Aug. 15.—Writing from High River, Alberta, the Prince of Wales has sent the following telegram to Premier King:
"Having finished the official part of my visit to Canada, may I once more thank you and the members of your Government for the great kindness and hospitality which has been shown to my brother and myself while we were your guests."

LOSSES CAUSED BY FIRE IN VANCOUVER

Vancouver, Aug. 15.—Fire which broke out in the basement of the premises occupied by the Western Supplies Limited at 317 Hastings Street West, here Saturday evening, caused considerable losses to five firms located in the building.

The firms which suffered loss were the Western Supplies Limited, the C. W. Copp Shoe Store, W. C. Ladd, clothing; Woods Shoe Store, and the Yale Shoe Store, all of whom are practically covered by insurance.

RESEARCH EFFORTS TO BE INCREASED

Federal Plans to be Laid Before Provincial Premiers at Conference Soon

Industries of Canada to be Given Aid, Says Hon James Malcolm

Hon. James Malcolm.

Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 15.—That a comprehensive plan for the expansion of Canada's efforts along the lines of scientific and industrial research is at the present time being evolved and will be discussed at the conference of provincial premiers in Ottawa in November, was announced by Hon. James Malcolm, Minister of Trade and Commerce, at a picnic here Saturday.

Mr. Malcolm, at the conclusion of a speech, in the course of which he made optimistic references to the general prosperity which existed throughout Canada, declared that "we have now reached, as a nation, a point in our economic position where we come into direct contact with the great nations of the world; where we come into competition with century-old producers in other countries who benefit by long experience in scientific research carried on both by themselves and by their governments."

WANT TO BE AIDED

Realizing this fact, he stated, the Government had decided to expand its research efforts so they would cover all basic industries with the least possible duplication of effort. National research laboratories would be established at Ottawa.

"There will be submitted to the conference of Provincial Premiers, which is to be held in Ottawa in November, a plan for the assistance to development of the smaller industries and every industry in the Dominion," said Mr. Malcolm. "The special needs and requirements of each province will be considered so that the greatest possible results may accrue with the least overlapping of Provincial and Federal endeavours."

"It is to be admitted that large corporations are in a position to do much research for themselves, but as Governments, both Provincial and Federal, we can be of assistance to the development of the smaller industries and individual producers who cannot afford to engage scientific advisers to work out their problems for them."

"I firmly believe Canada's development, if we stand steadily behind those who are engaged in producing wealth from our great resources, will be even more marked in the quarter century to come than it has been in the past."

Large Livestock Show at Vancouver

Vancouver, Aug. 15.—Vancouver's Diamond Jubilee Exhibition has attracted a record number of cattle entries, the best and dual purpose cattle, requiring the setting up of tents to accommodate the unusual number of between 550 and 600. J. K. Matheson, manager, stated the entries in cattle, horse, sheep, swine, goat and poultry classes also constituted the largest livestock show ever held in Vancouver.

The judging of the best breeds will commence Tuesday morning. Winners in the various sections of the cattle show will be decided by the following prominent Eastern Canadian judges: Best and dual purpose cattle, J. M. Gardhouse; Jersey, Frank G. Cox; Ayrshires, J. L. Stansell; Guernseys, J. Milligan Jr.; Holsteins, L. E. Franklin.

Horses were the feature in the livestock judging ring to-day, J. M. Gardhouse of Toronto awarding the ribbons.

Earth Shocks in Turkestan Were Cause of Deaths

Moscow, Aug. 15.—Reports from the region of Persia, Turkestan, indicate fifteen persons were killed and twenty seriously injured in an earthquake Saturday. About 100 houses were ruined at Namangan, where two shocks were felt and where the earthquake reached its maximum intensity. Considerable damage was done in other neighboring towns and villages. Earth shocks were also felt in Andijan, in the same region.

PREMIER BALDWIN SPOKE IN WINNIPEG

Great Crowd Heard Him While He Made Brief Stay in Manitoba Capital

Romance of Growth of Western Canada Subject of Remarks

Winnipeg, Aug. 15 (Canadian Press).—Premier Stanley Baldwin's last words to the people of the prairies were words of optimism for his homeland and words of praise for the British workingman. He scoffed at the idea of a revolution in Great Britain.

He declared in an address delivered at the Parliament Buildings here Saturday night that the self-restraint and courage of the workingman of Great Britain were an example to the world.

The Prime Minister and Mrs. Baldwin arrived in Winnipeg at 7:45 o'clock Saturday evening from Calgary and after a five-hour stop, continued their eastward journey, en route home.

At the Parliament Buildings a great crowd welcomed Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin. Mr. Baldwin spoke from an open window. The lawn below was packed and the stairways and halls behind him were jammed with people listening to the speech as it came over the amplifiers.

A laugh went up as Mr. Baldwin appeared, pipe in hand, on the platform before the open window. He calmly knocked the pipe on his knee, and began his speech.

FACED GREAT DIFFICULTIES
He spoke of the romance of the West, then turned to Great Britain. No country within the last ten years, he said, had faced such difficulties as had Great Britain. No country in the world had suffered as Great Britain had, nor had faced those difficulties with the same courage and with the same resolution. He would like two or three things to be realized about Great Britain. In the World War 6,000,000 of her population had served in the armies and 3,000,000 at munition works. Credit was destroyed, half the countries of the world. The devastated areas of Great Britain lay in broken markets in every country in the world. Such were the causes of Britain's unemployment.

Mr. Baldwin explained the unemployment insurance scheme in its payments by state, employer and employee. That insurance scheme, he said, had been misrepresented abroad. Payments by employer and employee to the scheme amounted to between £30,000,000 and £35,000,000 a year. Some £10,000,000 or £12,000,000 came from the state. Those contributions together formed the insurance fund, from which each unemployed worker was entitled to draw a modest sum each week.

The system had been strained to the utmost by the many troubles Great Britain had to face. The borrowing power of the insurance fund had had to be increased.

ROMANCE OF CANADA

Speaking of the romance of Western Canada, Mr. Baldwin said no part of the Dominion had gained more than Manitoba from the union of East and West. Nowhere could one have a more illuminating revelation of the building of a nation.

With facile phrase he sketched the early days of the West. There was no more romantic episode in the history of the Empire than the story of the Company of Adventurers Trading into Hudson Bay.

Mr. Baldwin said: "To look for the Northwest Passage while making profits out of furs; to obtain a charter of sovereignty over the land, which contained all the waters flowing into Hudson Bay while leaving these lands unexplored for many years—that was typically British. To seek for the western equivalents of peacocks, apes and ivory and found an empire as a by-product; to create a great tradition of discipline and endurance around a commercial ideal; to treat the Indians as sources of profit, and yet to treat them just and kindly, to keep one eye on dividends and the other on exploration—what other race could be so casual and so far-sighted, so inconsistent and so successful?"

THRILLING STORY
The Hudson's Bay Company had been all these things. No one with a spark of imagination would fail to be thrilled by its story. They were the pathfinders, the trailbreakers. The names of their officers and the officers of their rivals and ultimate partners, the Northwest Company, were recorded forever on the maps of Canada by such rivers as the Mackenzie, the Fraser, the Thompson and the Stewart.

The spirit of the company was recorded, too, in the growth of law and order, in the planting of the germs of government, in the development of a transport system, and of an intelligence department in a country half the size of Europe.

CHEERED BY CROWD
White River, Ont., Aug. 15.—When Premier Baldwin passed through here early last evening a crowd gathered on the station platform. The British Prime Minister was cheered as he descended from the train during the five-minute stop. He shook hands with many of the crowd and with railway employees and as the train pulled out he was cheered again.

Dr. F. W. Ferris Died in Edmonton

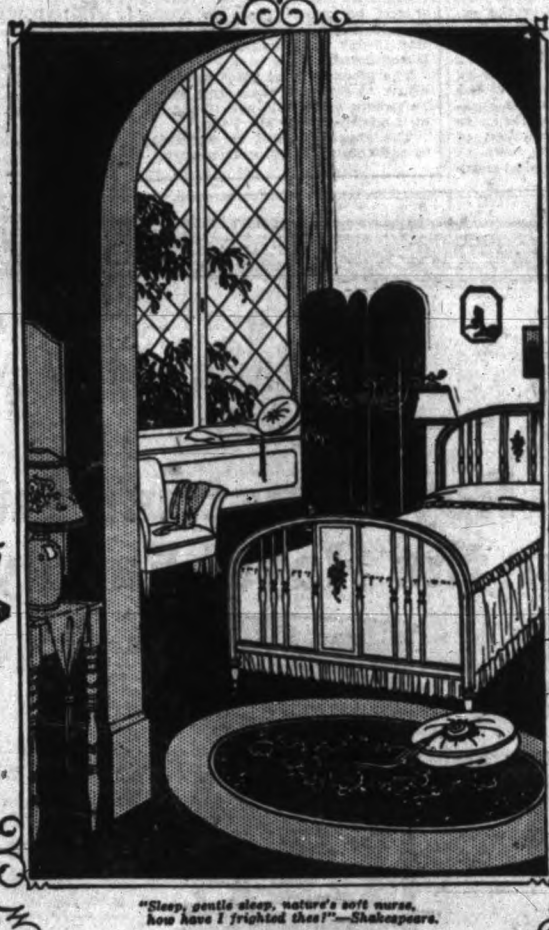

Edmonton, Aug. 15.—One of Edmonton's best known physicians, Dr. F. W. Ferris, died suddenly Saturday morning. He was attending the reception to the Prince of Wales and Prince George when he was stricken by a heart attack.

He was born at Shelburne, Ont., fifty-seven years ago. He was a graduate of the University of Toronto, where he was prominent in athletics, being a member of the varsity rugby football team.

Dr. Ferris had a distinguished military record. He was officer in charge at Shorncliffe Military Hospital for a year and a half, and later was with No. 1 casualty clearing station in France. On his return to Edmonton he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel in the militia forces and was gazetted commandant of No. 6 clearing station here.

THE CONSERVATIVE PRESS AND THE CONTEST IN NEW WESTMINSTER

IN ITS ISSUE OF YESTERDAY THE morning paper discusses the forthcoming byelection in New Westminster and tells us that the decision to hold it so speedily after the vacancy occurred violates the "customary canons of the present provincial Government's procedure." It follows that up with this remarkable statement:

It is the Liberal caucus which has decreed the holding of the New Westminster byelection on August 26, a precipitate action for which the Government of its own volition would hardly have been responsible. The caucus recently appointed Dr. J. D. MacLean as acting leader during the illness of Premier Oliver. It appears, in many respects, to have usurped the functions of government, and in doing so it has taken advantage of the most regrettable indisposition of the leader of the Government and of the leader of the Liberal Party in British Columbia. Are we to understand that there is to be government in future by such a wholly unrecognized body in a constitutional sense as a Liberal caucus? That should be an issue at the New Westminster byelection. It is a grave issue because it raises the question of infringement of the prerogatives and duties of constitutional government.

The Liberal caucus did not decide the date upon which the byelection in New Westminster would be held. There would be nothing extraordinary in such a course if it had done so. The caucus is composed of the Liberal members of the Legislature. It discusses all matters of policy during a session of the House—the Conservative caucus does the same—the only difference on the last occasion being that the House was not in session. But its specific business, as the morning papers know, was the discussion of an unhappy development—the illness of Premier Oliver and its possible effect upon his continued leadership of the Party.

The chief significance of The Colonist's statement lies in the fact that it reveals the provincial Conservative Party's utter lack of policy. It asks the people of New Westminster to waste their time in a discussion of a fictitious action by a Liberal caucus and calls it a grave issue. Apparently this is all the Conservative Party has to offer; and it is now nine months since it reorganized itself at Kamloops and selected Dr. Tolmie for its leader!

Have the Conservatives nothing to say on finance, old-age pensions, public health, education, public works, irrigation, and numerous other subjects of vital public concern? What would they do with the Pacific Great Eastern Railway if they were in office? There is very little prospect of a general election changing the Administration; but, as Opposition members and the morning paper pretend to be quite sure that Dr. Tolmie is going to be the next Premier of British Columbia, surely the people of the Province ought to be given some inkling as to how their affairs would be looked after in that event. Yet the chief issue of the election as The Colonist sees it is a decision by a Liberal caucus, a minor circumstance even if the story of it were true.

The Vancouver Province, however, considers the issues confronting the New Westminster electorate from an entirely different standpoint. It opposes the Government quite often; but in its discussion of the forthcoming contest it admits that there are many measures to which the Party in office has given effect with general benefit. In this regard it says:

The Oliver Government—and the name of John Oliver can be more appropriately associated with his Government in this connection than in any other that ought to be remembered at this time of his life—will leave a respectable record of legislative achievement. Most of its social legislation was not merely well-intended, but it has actually made life a little easier for a great many poor people in this Province. Widows' pensions have been a good thing. We are all hoping that the old age pensions will be a good thing. On the whole, the finances of British Columbia have been capably and honestly administered by the Oliver Government. There has been a real development of the province by virtue of a comprehensive road-building policy. If the Pacific Great Eastern Railway is a useful item on the wrong side of the ledger, the Oliver Government can clear itself of the primary blame for it.

Let us quote The Province again: "We think it is quite possible to lift this quarrel"—meaning the issues of the byelection—"above the level of mere recrimination between the In's and Out's. It is really the issue of good government in British Columbia." What has the Conservative Party offered for the good government of British Columbia? What is its policy, anyway?

FROST AND THE CROP

A PREHENSION ABOUT FROST IN the warm days of early August means little to the people of Victoria; but frost in August in the great grain-growing areas of the country might easily mean a good deal indirectly to all the people of Canada. For nearly two weeks now the farmers of the Prairies have been watching their barometers for the slightest indication of lower temperatures. So far very little frost has been encountered and latest advice from the various central points indicate a continuance of fair and warm weather. In a few days the period of anxiety will be over, harvesting will have begun in earnest, and the experts will know pretty well how many bushels will be gathered in and the approximate revenue the crop will return.

NO FORMAL TREATY NECESSARY

NOT A LITTLE INTEREST IS BEING shown in the movement to persuade Great Britain and the United States to enter into a treaty to insure one hundred years more peace between the two nations.

This suggestion may be interesting; but it will never come to anything. It is unnecessary in the first place; it might even provoke other nations to enter into alliances that would perhaps menace the peace of the world. In the second place, it follows that unless there already be goodwill—and, happily, there is—between Great Britain and the neighboring republic, no signed document ever could promote it or secure it.

A treaty of peace between Great Britain and the United States is no more necessary than a written constitution for the British Empire. The two countries understand one another much better than some people try to make out. They can send their respective representatives to Geneva and instruct them to disagree on naval armament, and before that disagreement is many hours old they again can send their respective representatives to a joint celebration of the opening of another link of peace and concord between them. The recent ceremony at Fort Erie is a case in point.

The thinking people of both countries see more point in the unfortified frontier which separates Canada from the United States than they do in formal alliances. That constitutes a practical example of how people who speak the same language and enjoy the same freedom can live side by side in peaceful association.

TRANQUILLE

THE PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT HAS made no error in arranging to increase the accommodation at its Tranquille institution by the addition of another hundred-bed section. At the present time there is accommodation for only 235 patients, and there nearly always is a large number of applicants for admission on the waiting list.

It is sometimes forgotten that the institution at Tranquille never was intended for advanced cases of tuberculosis. It was meant to receive those sufferers whose condition had not developed beyond the incipient stage and for whom there was every chance of complete recovery. Lack of sufficient accommodation elsewhere, of course, soon upset this policy, while many in an easily curable condition have had to wait for admission so long that they have developed into the advanced stage. It then costs more to treat them and the economic loss occasioned by their inability to remain producers can not be escaped.

It is unfortunate that more of our people do not make a point of visiting this institution. Since it was taken over by the Government its efficiency has considerably increased and it would be difficult to find a more smoothly-running organization of its kind anywhere. It is to be noted, too, that the farm adjacent to the buildings is producing foodstuffs of an excellent quality and is paying its way.

WHAT OTHER PAPERS SAY

GOOD JUDGMENT
From The Manitoba Free Press

During the last few months strikes were in prospect at several times between the two Canadian railways and certain sections of their employees. However, no rash action was taken. Negotiations were kept up, the federal department of labor lent its services, and everybody kept cool. The result is that in every case agreement appears to have been reached between the employers and the employees, with the result that there will be no strikes or stoppage of services.

What has been done is a tribute to the good sense of all concerned. The employees go on working, and if they are naturally in the case—they are not to experience the heavy loss that always results from a strike and stoppage of pay. The employers are able to maintain their services and will be better off in the long run than if they had refused to budge to meet the employees and had thereby forced a strike.

And then there remains the most important factor of all—the goodwill of all connected with an industry. This is one of the essentials of success, and nothing does more to damage it than a battle between employers and employees.

It is not hard to see that the Canadian railways and their workers are fortunate in the course they have pursued.

"SPUD ISLAND"
From The Ottawa Citizen

There is nothing wrong about a province that runs to seed, provided it is seed of the right kind. Prince Edward Island, the smallest of our provinces, with an area of only 1,000,000 acres, has about $5,000 acres devoted to potatoes, particularly seed potatoes; thus justifying its rights to its new-won title of "Spud Island."

In 1818 the first car of certified seed potatoes was shipped from Prince Edward Island. Since then the province has won recognition all over America as the centre of pure seed potato growing, particularly of the variety known as Irish Cobbler.

The word "Irish" used in connection with the potato recalls a little known chapter in potato history. Until Columbus discovered America and the early explorers had carried some of the curious plants of the New World back to the Old, potatoes were unknown in Europe. The name "Irish" was later applied to the fruit of the potato plant because the introduction of the culture into Ireland saved the people from the terrible famines that had often devastated the country, and not because the potato is a native of the Emerald Isle.

Irish Cobbler are regarded by experts as the aristocrat, the Brian Boru of the potato family. It is interesting, therefore, to note that of the 10,716 acres on the North American continent devoted to Cabbler-growing and passing final inspection, over sixty per cent. of these acres are in Prince Edward Island.

Canadian Questions and Answers

CANADA'S FIRST SHIPMENT OF WHEAT

Q.—When was Canada's first shipment of wheat?
A.—Canada's first shipment of wheat from the West was fifty years ago, when 857 bushels of wheat were shipped from Winnipeg to Toronto, first by Red River boat to Duluth and then by rail to Toronto. To-day Canada is the greatest wheat exporting country in the world. The anniversary of this initial shipment from the West was recently celebrated in Winnipeg.

CONFEDERATION AND AFTER

Sixty Years of Progress

NO. 74
SIXTY YEARS OF ART

Almost all movements for the advancement of the art of painting in Canada have taken place during the sixty years of Confederation. The first was in 1875, when the Ontario Society of Artists, which still is a flourishing organization, held its first exhibition. Seven years later, in 1882, the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts was established. Between these two, about 1878, the Art Association of Montreal was organized. These three are the only important pioneer groups that have survived. Many others have started, notably the Canadian Art Club, which lasted about a decade after the year 1907, and the Group of Seven, which still is in its swaddling clothes.

The Royal Canadian Academy, to which the National Gallery of Canada at Ottawa traces its beginning, was established at the instance of Lord Lorne and his consort, the Princess Louise. Of the original group of painter members (about a dozen) only remain, namely, T. Moser Martin and Marmaduke Mathews. These two were among the exhibitors at the first exhibition of the Ontario Society of Artists. The Academy has had eight

Although the Academy is the only art body in Canada that issues a diploma, the importance of that distinction is not always acknowledged. It is an interesting fact, however, that some of the painter members are also members of other art organizations, for instance, of the Ontario Society of Artists, the Group of Seven and the Art Association of Montreal. There are also the Arts and Letters Club and the Graphic Art Club of Toronto, the Arts Club of Montreal, and many other varied art organizations throughout the country. The two oldest schools of art are the Ontario College of Art, Toronto, which has held together under successive names for half a century, until now it is the Ontario College of Art, and the Art Association of Montreal. Next comes the Women's Art Association of Toronto, which has affiliated associations throughout the Dominion, especially in Ontario. Until within recent years, the art product of Canada has not been widely known in other countries. The two exhibitions at Wembley, the recent one at Paris, and others at St. Louis, San Francisco, Philadelphia, have shown to the world that Canada has produced a creditable proportion of artists whose work can and does command respect and admiration. Taken singly outside the Dominion, only a very few Canadians would be acknowledged or taken into account. Of these few, the late James Wilson MacRae is the outstanding example. We have had Paul Peel and Blair Bruce, and Wyatt Eaton and Tom Thomson, but they all died young, before their art had reached the extent of their fame surely is not great. On the whole, street, sounding my horn with traffic on my left, I had the right of way. I was 200 feet away, racing at thirty-five to forty miles per hour, very nearly ran me down. A policeman standing by to whom I appealed, said the car was going so fast he could not get the number. The second was similar in every respect. The third, yesterday by a visitor motorist, suddenly swerving across my path without giving any hand signal, and in avoiding him I went on to pavement. He had the grace to admit he was entirely in the wrong, but that he had noticed my hand signals were not given in Victoria.

This is putting undue strain on my guardian angel, and he is not likely to give me a little of his valuable space to say a few words on the above subject. I notice that in your issue for Saturday, Mrs. Green has a letter in answer to Mr. Winter in which she starts by saying that Mrs. Green had better take the mote out of her own eye before she tries to take the beam out of anyone else's. Her letter, to my mind, was absolutely full of abuse. Mrs. Green glibly talks about The Home Office Return, quoting at the same time divers figures. I should like to ask her where she ever set eyes on any Home Office Return. The writer with the usual hysterical cry of the anti-vivisectionists, talks of the frightful atrocities practised by the vivisectionists on poor helpless animals. This sort of nonsense may go down with some people, but not with the thinking man. As I have pointed out in a previous letter, animals put on the table for experimental purposes are anaesthetized and, in the majority of cases, killed after the operation. To say, as the writer does, that no good fact can be wrung out of the helpless body of an animal, simply proves without the shadow of a doubt, the absolute ignorance of the writer concerning the subject in question. It might interest Mrs. Green to know that since the introduction of vaccination the number of cases of smallpox have tremendously decreased.

I notice that any instances of atrocities Mrs. Green may give are always confined to American doctors. I can quite understand her reason for that. It would never do for her to mention Canadian doctors; it would not be safe. I should like to see her do it and see what happens. Mrs. Green says that the vivisectionists know that the animals are no true guides. This is absolutely untrue, and furthermore, Mrs. Green knows perfectly well that she cannot prove her statement. She then goes on to make the still more appalling statement that vivisectionists take every opportunity to experiment on people. For pure unadulterated fiction this beats everything. Does Mrs. Green really think that any thinking man or woman is going to believe that? They are not. I challenge Mrs. Green to send me a list of the names of people she has actually known who have been experimented on by doctors. This sort of talk is a direct libel against doctors and should be taken up. It would only be a waste of time and space to comment on the rest of Mrs. Green's letter. To conclude, as I said in a previous letter, the work of the doctors is the work of Christ. As, however, they cannot like "The Great Physician," lay their hands on the sick and heal them, they have to resort to medicine. This sometimes necessitates the use of antitoxins in which case they have to experiment on animals; but as for deliberate cruelty being practiced on them, the idea is too absurd for comment. I look forward to the time when the law will step in and make it illegal for these people to publish this rubbish about doctors.

GREEN 'PHONE POLES URGED FOR BEAUTY

New telephone and other poles erected at the side of city streets should be painted green in future. This is the suggestion made to the city today by Ernest D. Todd, 808 Island Road.

The green painted poles would do much to enhance their appearance on streets, and would add to the life of the poles, states Mr. Todd.

The suggestion will be forwarded to the council at its next session.

BIG OPIUM RAID IS MADE IN NEWARK

Newark, N.J., Aug. 15.—Armed with axes and crowbars, a raiding party of forty federal agents and local police last night literally hewed their way through this city's Chinatown, seizing opium valued at $25,000 and arresting sixteen Chinese. Most of the contraband was taken from hidden panels behind doors and walls and under flooring in thirteen buildings in Mulberry Arcade.

RAT WAS THE BURGLAR

Jeffersonville, Ind., Aug. 15.—Most of the city police force, with weapons drawn, waited in front of a grocery store from which a burglar alarm had sounded. But they missed their quarry because they failed to bring a rat trap. Finally rushing the place, they discovered a large rat running about inside.

"The Stars Incline, But Do Not Compel"

(Copyright)

TUESDAY, AUGUST 16, 1927

(Copyrighted by McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

Many conflicting planetary influences have power to-day, according to astrology, which reads in the stars disturbances.

While labor and capital should prosper at this time, there are signs indicating criticism and misunderstandings.

For high officials who desire to retain their positions misrepresentation of their motives and policies is forecast.

Suspicion of bankers and capitalist may be even broadened and the seeds will find lodgment in fertile soil West of the Mississippi the seeds prophesy.

All the stars appear to preface for the United States the most marvelous prestige and prosperity.

This is an auspicious time for merchants and manufacturers to expand their interests.

Women are subject to stimulating and helpful leadings while this configuration prevails, and they should be able to accomplish more than usual.

There is a benefic sign for romance and courtship, which will flourish especially under the harvest Moon.

Good news for importers and designers of women's clothing again is foreshadowed.

Changes in fashions will be to the advantage of those who sell millinery as well as gowns and wraps.

Theatres continue under a rule making for increase of interest in the drama. This should be a favorable date for trying out plays.

All the signs continue to promise aviation tremendous activity and development. Uranus smiles on aerial navigation in all forms.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of many important and profitable changes in the coming year.

Children born on this day may be broad-minded and most ambitious.
Many subjects of this sign seek public careers, but they may not attain success until after long struggle.

SEES GOOD ELEVATOR HERE FOR MONEY

O. M. Margison of Toronto, former Victoria boy, who is now one of the chief consultant engineers of the East, has arrived in Victoria with his wife and family on a holiday visit with relatives here.

Mr. Margison has been engineering advice on a number of elevator and harbor works on the Great Lakes since the war and is now engineering consultant on several skyscraper buildings some up in the downtown part of Toronto.

While here Mr. Margison has been looking into the project for the construction of the grain elevator at Ogden Point Docks and local persons have discussed the matter with him.

"To show what can be done in elevator construction costs, I may say that under one of my associates in Toronto, the new wheat elevator at Goodrich has been completed. The cost of this, which is a million-bushel structure, was $350,000. Besides the elevator proper this cost included construction of three wooden barge and a marine loading tower with the capacity of handling 40,000 bushels an hour.

The foundation work presented more difficult problems and more expense than the foundation work will do at Ogden Point.

Mr. Margison and his family have been holidaying at Banff and Salt Spring Island as well as in Victoria and will go on to Seattle from here.

Heat Stroke May Leave Serious Secondary Symptoms

By DR. MORRIS FISHER

Two physicians, Drs. Wakefield and Hall, have recently made available a survey of the various injurious effects of heat that occur in the fire and engine rooms of ships, as well as other deaths from heat in the naval service.
Among the forms of disturbances they list heat cramps, heat exhaustion, sunstroke and thermic fever.

Heat stroke was described by the most ancient physicians and is mentioned definitely in Biblical records. In 1780, Dr. Benjamin Rush called attention to the fact that the disorder was occasioned by drinking cold water in warm weather and this view became so prevalent that it found place even in the readers used in the public schools. Highly moral stories were written relative to the boy who became overpowered, drank cold water and promptly died. It has been found more recently that cautious application of cold cloths or of ice may be helpful.

Sometimes the person who recovers from heat stroke will have secondary symptoms of great seriousness, indicating that the effects on the human body are relatively permanent. One may also become accustomed gradually to greater degrees of heat. A study of the conditions of heat stroke shows that it is far more common among those living in the northern parts than among those born and reared in the south.

A scientific study made on experimental animals by the physicians of the navy indicated that the kidneys are injured by severe heat stroke so that they are unable to undertake properly the elimination necessary to keep the body in health. Sometimes the amount of sugar in the blood is increased, but this varies.

There is also a tendency toward the accumulation of acid, or rather a lowering of the alkaline reserve of the body.
In other words, the main effects of heat stroke are to bring about a rapid increase in the acid material of the body and the symptoms associated with this are associated with acidosis in general.

One Way to Spoil a Vacation

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

A feminist on a summer lecturing tour declares that man's life is less interesting than woman's. I think she means less busy. Also in many ways, more sensible. Put a woman anywhere, and she's going to fill up her time completely with one thing or another.
She does not know how to relax.

A tired little stenographer went on a two-weeks' vacation trip with three other girls. The bus tour through mountain scenery and cool valleys was the very thing she needed. There was no reason why she should not have returned to the office fresh and rosy for another run of work.

But every night after a movie or whatever there was to do in the towns at which they stopped—she went through a series of riffs about clothes and things that no pagan priest could have rivaled.

She unpacked everything she owned and hung them up on hangers "because they got stuffy." She pressed her collars, cuffs and belts, and washed out handkerchiefs, stockings and undies because she "never liked to carry anything soiled along." By the time she got her bath and adjusted a dozen hair combs under a cap so her hair would be properly waved in the morning it was usually two o'clock when she crawled into bed. She was up at dawn to get things carefully packed again and to make a toilet that took hours instead of minutes.

Daintiness—who can question cleanliness—who can criticize? Careful grooming by all means? But why sacrifice a much-needed rest by carrying all these to foolish extremes? Her hat was on all day—nobody but she herself knew the waves were there. A few wrinkles in her clothes could be forgotten on such a trip. A little managing, or rather a little less managing, would have added hours a day to her vacation and rest.

A man would have spent the time in no such manner. Little things makes the lives of many women very full, but does that mean that men do not rest the best and biggest at times when appearances may be to the contrary?

E. H. GARY, HEAD OF U.S. STEEL, DIED AT NEW YORK TO-DAY

GLIMPSED POSSIBILITIES

As directing head of the Federal Steel Company, Mr. Gary saw the larger possibilities of the industry and had often expressed his views to Mr. Morgan. The latter at first did not take to the idea advanced by Mr. Gary for a great steel corporation. However, there came a time when it became known that Andrew Carnegie, then the foremost man in the steel industry of the United States was desirous of retiring so he could devote the rest of his life to philanthropy, education and world peace.

Gary wanted to have a steel company that could compete with Germany and Great Britain, which were dominating the international market. Mr. Morgan finally decided to give his backing to the formation of a giant steel merger along the lines Gary had proposed. With the organization of the United States Steel Corporation the business created by Gary's plan was purchased in 1901 for $402,000,000, and in all ten large companies were taken into the merger with a combined capital of $887,500,000.

The steel strike had its inception in a resolution introduced by William Z. Foster at the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor at St. Paul in 1918, providing for the organization of the steel industry. After that convention Samuel Gompers sent a letter to Mr. Gary asking him to meet a committee to discuss questions affecting the welfare of the steel industry. Mr. Gary did not answer the letter and subsequent attempts to have him meet the committee were in vain. Threats of a strike continued until the 1919 convention of the American Federation of Labor, when September 23 of that year was fixed as the date for the walk-out. The strike order went into effect and while the industry was hampered it was not entirely crippled. The strike was officially called off in January, 1920, without one of the demands having been complied with.

Perhaps the one man to whom the growth of the corporation was due was Gary. It was such a great concern at its organization that he foresaw it would be subject to attack. It was this forecast that impelled him to insist upon the policy that the corporation at all times should conduct itself in all dealing with competitors and with the public in such a manner that it could at any time show clean hands.

TWO GREAT TESTS

This policy in later years enabled the corporation to emerge triumphant in two events—first, the steel strike of 1919, and second, the steel strike—defeat in either of which, the former at least, would have blasted the foundation upon which the corporation was built and grew.

The Government's suit, instituted in 1912, resulted from a series of con-

EARLE ST. WOMAN SAYS HUSKY GIVES HER NEW STRENGTH

Was Weak, Nervous and in a General Run Down Condition; Have This Medicine Explained at the McFarlane Drug Co.

Every man and woman in Victoria and surrounding territory suffering from stomach, liver, kidney or bowel trouble, can secure relief from their afflictions if they will only heed the advice of hundreds of this city's most highly respected residents. With hundreds here using Husky, the herb preparation, distributed by the McFarlane Drug Co., with wonderful results and hundreds of the benefited telling of their remarkable experience in signed statements of appreciation, the fact is proven that Husky is doing all for which it is intended.

One of the many Victoria residents endorsing Husky after giving it a thorough trial is Mrs. Audrey Hayhoe, 1316 Earle Street, who describes her experience as follows: "Before I began using the Husky treatment I was in a very run down state of health. I was nervous and felt weak all the time. I had no energy and the slightest exertion seemed to exhaust me completely. I knew that I must do something about myself and when I heard about helping so many other people I decided to give it a trial.

"Husky fulfilled every expectation and more, for it has made me feel like a new person. Husky has relieved the nervousness and has strengthened me wonderfully and I am getting new enjoyment out of life. I know that others will find Husky a real health builder if they give the treatment a fair trial."

Call at McFarlane Drug Co.

The Husky expert is at the McFarlane Drug Co., Husky headquarters, and he will gladly explain to you how the best and quickest results may be obtained from the Husky treatment. Call on him today and get complete information about this preparation, which is helping so many people in Victoria. (Adv.)

MRS. SHRYOCK

After his removal to Chicago, Mr. Gary engaged in the general practice of law for twenty-five years, and he was drafted from the ranks of that profession eventually to become the outstanding figure in the great steel industry. He served as president of the Chicago Bar Association in 1899-1900, and for a time was a member of the United States section of the International High Commission named to assist the Allies during the World War. He was responsible for the Steel Corporation's attitude in shipping to meet the needs of the Allies in the emergency created by the war.

MANY PUBLIC GIFTS

Mr. Gary's public benefactions aggregated hundreds of thousands of dollars. He had given unstintingly and little was known of them because he was averse to that sort of publicity. While Mr. Gary belonged to more than two-score clubs and organizations, he was not a so-called club man. He took a great personal interest in the American Iron and Steel Institute, composed of more than ninety per cent of the steel and iron manufacturers of the United States, and was its president throughout his life.

Famous Dumas Story Will Play At Capitol During Week With Popular Stars

"Monte Cristo," the Very Name Breathing a Spirit of Mystery and Adventure, a Tale That Only the Great French Author Could Master, Is the Capitol's Feature Presentation

History repeats itself, even in the production of motion pictures. When the critics and public heaped praise upon the combination of John Gilbert and Renee Adoree after the triumphant presentation of "The Big Parade," few recalled the fact that both of these noted screen artists first won fame while playing opposite each other in the motion picture "Monte Cristo," based on the celebrated novel by Alexandre Dumas, which will have its presentation at the Capitol Theatre commencing to-day.

In this picture, too, Miss Adoree plays the role of a French girl, not of the same type, but still of the same character as the individual she characterized in "The Big Parade." Gilbert, in the role of the Count of Monte Cristo, not only is seen as the youthful lover, which type has made him an idol in recent pictures, but he also demonstrates his marvelous versatility by depicting the count as an aged man, who defies the world in his quest of vengeance.

Probably the highest price ever paid for the right to publish four words from a published work was given by William Fox to the estate of the late

James O'Neill, actor, for the privilege of using the line "The world is mine," in the motion picture version of Alexandre Dumas's story, "The Count of Monte Cristo." This line is indelubly associated throughout the world with the play and Fox, when he decided to produce this story, decided to use it regardless of cost.

combination, which has proved so successful in pictures released during the past six months. Others in the cast include Estelle Taylor, William Morris, Robert McKim, Ralph Clontinger, Spottiswoode Aitken, George Seigman, Virginia Brown Faire, Gaston Glass and Francis McDonald.

The stage attractions at the Capitol Theatre this week are also of a high calibre, and include such favorites as "The Harmony Singers," Mae and Phyllis Keith, in some very catchy new melodies and songs; William Dogan, an eminent bass soloist, in song selections, and "The Hartmans," in "The Act Supreme," full of novelty and surprise. The Capitol Theatre Concert Orchestra will also be featured.

Little Boy Leads Caste of Actors In Story of Sea

Tale of the Days of Great Sailing Ships is Heart-stirring Romance

It is safe to say that any "kid" from the ranks of moviedom's embryonic stars would gladly forfeit his right to ice cream cones for the rest of his days in return for the "plum" that is now Junior Coghlan's.

For the last rising De Mille child actor, fresh from an important part in "The Last Frontier," was assigned one of the most coveted "kid" parts of the year, a featured role in "The British Clipper," Rupert Julian's epochal production of America's hey-day on the seas, now showing at the Variety. His role is that of a wharf rat of the '50s, a gamin who hates women and loves ships, and who is disgusted because a ship is referred to as "she."

Junior, whose rise to screen prominence has been rapid by virtue of splendid work in several outstanding productions during the past year, among them "Miles," "Her Man o' War," and "The Last Frontier," was added to a cast which is headed by William Boyd and Elinor Fair, who were seen in the featured leads of "The Volga Boatman." The story of "The British Clipper," written by Denison Clift, is based upon an historic race between an American clipper and a British ship, each the first of her type to be built by her respective nation, from Foo Chow, China, to Boston Harbor. The action is dramatic and there are many thrilling scenes. Walter Long is featured and the supporting cast is brilliant. The picture was filmed under the supervision of C. Gardner Sullivan.

one as comedy-relief, the other as serious romance.

In First National's "Babe Comes Home," a breezy comedy drama of love and baseball that is pleasing patrons of the Playhouse Theatre this week, there are two very amusing love affairs that vie with each other in comedy moments. The principal one is between the star, Babe Ruth, and Anna Q. Nilsson, who, with Louise Fazenda, is featured in the picture; the second affair is between Ethel Shannon and Lou Archer.

The romance between the famous slugger and the blonde film star is said to be one of the most novel love affairs ever devised by the resourceful screenwriters. Baseball and romance, laundry atmosphere and carnival thrills contribute variety and color to the picture.

Hollywood's Hermit Is Sight of the Film Colony

Hollywood, Cal., Aug. 15.—Peter the Hermit, who got into the news the other day by filing suit against a movie producer for $100,000 for alleged violation of an agreement whereby the old man was to get the leading role in "Resurrection," is one of the sights of Hollywood.

He is in Hollywood, but not of it. He has lived here for many years, yet he holds himself aloof from the city's population and condemns most of the cinema folk because of their lack of religion and their much discussed moral code.

The Hermit's last name is Howard, though he seldom uses it. His home, a small shack, isolated in the Hollywood hills, earned for him the name of Peter the Hermit. He spends most of his time back in the hills, coming into town only now and then when he has to buy the few items of food that he cannot grow on his little plot of ground.

Peter has played atmosphere bits in the movies now and then to earn money for his groceries, but he has never had any leading roles.

His suit against the producers of "Resurrection" is for $30,000, which he thinks would have been a fair wage for playing in the film, and $100,000 damages for the damage done his reputation by not getting the role.

Regardless of the merits of the case, Hollywood is interested in wondering what Peter Howard would do if he did win. Unless the old patriarch has a hoard of misused wealth hidden away, $100,000 is more than he ever dreamed of having. Hollywood would like to see how he would spend it.

Irish Humor That All The World Can Laugh At A Part Of Big Dominion Picture

"The Callahans and the Murphys" Is One of the Biggest Comedy Successes of the Motion Picture World; Kathleen Norris Depicts Tenement Homes With Nice Precision; Picture True to Life

"Built for laughs."

This is the only phase that would describe "The Callahans and the Murphys," Kathleen Norris' biting romance of Irish life, as transferred to the screen by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and now showing at the Dominion Theatre all week.

It is not a collection of laughs—it is literally one prolonged howl of mirth. From the opening battle of the Callahans and the Murphys to the final fade-out—with the family in battle again—it is a series of comical combats, tangled tribulations and hilarious happenings.

Sally O'Neill scores a new triumph as Ellen Callahan, heroine of the comical romance. She and Larry Gray supply the romance, in a delicate little love story—with just a bit of a heart throb, that is woven through the collection of chuckles, giggles and guffaws that criss-cross the picture. Miss O'Neill does some of the best work in her brief but eventful career as the little Irish girl.

For laughs—there is Marie Dressler, famous for "Tillie's Punctured Romance," in the role of the redoubtable "Mrs. Callahan" in constant battle with the sharp-tongued "Mrs. Murphy," as played by Polly Moran. Gertrude Olmstead, as the beautiful "Monica Murphy," has another bit of love interest—with the comical Eddie Gribbon as her lover—a combination so incongruous that in itself it is comedy to gaze upon.

George Hill, who gave the world "Tall It to the Marine," directed the new picture—and discloses that his forte is whimsical comedy. All the comedy is based in natural situations and real-life happenings—all his characters are human beings, hence their convincing qualities.

Frank Currier, Drew Demarest, Tom Lewis, Turner Savage, Monty O'Grady, Dawn O'Day, Jackie Combs and

VANCOUVER POLICE HUNT AUTO THIEVES

Vancouver, Aug. 15.—Auto strippers are working in the vicinity of this city, according to investigations carried out by the police following the discovery of two automobiles in the bush in the 3400 block of Twenty-second Avenue East Sunday morning.

Motorcycle Officer D. B. Shirley found the machines had been stripped of everything readily removable, the trunk in the case of one car, stolen from S. Bostrom, 53 Sixth Avenue West, having been smashed by the thieves. The second car was stolen from A. C. Smith, 2870 Thirteenth Avenue West, the rear end and driving shaft of this auto having been taken away by the thieves.

Lausanne, Switzerland, Aug. 15.—The differences between East and West on the subject of sacraments were clearly shown during discussions at the World Conference on Faith and Order here. Delegates acknowledged that the conference faced one of its most difficult tasks in reconciling the mystical views of the Eastern or Greek Catholic Church and its superstitious reverence for tradition, with the modern opinions of Western Protestantism.

Bishop Nicholas of Ochrida, Yugoslavia, representative of the Eastern Orthodox Church was one of the speakers selected to present the subject of the sacraments. He said there were seven sacraments, namely, Baptism, Confirmation, The Eucharist, Penance, Ordination, Marriage and Extreme Unction.

While recognizing the important problems that arise in connection with the other sacramental rites of the church, the conference decided to limit discussion as far as possible to Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

The representative of the Eastern Orthodox Church defined all these rights as "mysteries" and protested against any limitation of the subjects to this selected.

"As for us of the East," he said, "we are afraid to deprecate any of the seven marvelous mysteries."

He also argued against any attempt to set up modern opinion against traditional interpretation of the sacraments.

NEW SERIAL STORY

"The Wife & Co."

By LYLE HAMILTON

CHAPTER I

Mrs. Potter's flat was at the top of a very long flight of steps. It started at the street door, and went upward without a turn or landing or any other place to pause. The flat itself occupied the whole second floor of a two-story house, and was uncommonly high above the ground. This basement began in a narrow alleyway, and the flat was higher above the sidewalk than a man's head. So, when anyone went up Mrs. Potter's stairs, it was necessary to approach the door from the sidewalk to the level of the first floor, and then to keep on climbing another full story more.

The girls who lived at Mrs. Potter's used to call this stairway "the climb." When they came home from work at night or from parties in the early morning, the ascent was steep, and very tiring, and furthermore the steps creaked. It was after parties that they objected to the creaking, on account of Mrs. Potter's disposition.

Molly Louise Arthur Anderson lived just at the head of the stairs, to the left. Her room looked out on the back yard, which was twelve feet deep and as much as twenty-five feet wide. Two girls lived in the room next to her, and around the corner of the hall three other girls had a room, next to Mrs. Potter's own suite, which was composed of a bedroom and a kitchen.

The bathroom—there was only one—was at the corner of the hall. This bathroom was the nearest approach to a social meeting place that the establishment possessed. The girls would grow there in the mornings, and exchange snatches of news, concerning new hats, and coats, and boy friends, while they hurried their toilets. It was necessary for them to hasten in order that they might have time for breakfast before going to work, because they always stayed in bed until the last possible moment.

Mrs. Potter was regarded by all of them as a difficult figure of life in the flat. She had a habit of appearing at the head of the stairs, when a girl came home after midnight, and staring without a word until the lodger had mounted the steps and entered her room and closed the door. If a young man came, she remained outside and bang upon the wood work. More than once she had been known to set a girl's trunk and suitcase out in the hall, and tell her to begone.

A fear of these demonstrations kept the girls subdued, more or less, while they were in their rooms, and ordinarily they would not invite their male acquaintances to the flat at all. They would meet the boys outside—at the corner, for instance, when returning home.

Molly L. A. Anderson had no more love for Mrs. Potter than the other girls, but on the whole she approved of the landlady's demand for strict propriety. Molly was engaged to be married, and she often told her fiancé that Mrs. Potter kept "an awfully decent place."

The young man had met Mrs. Potter. Molly had introduced him with a glow of pride.

"Mrs. Potter, I want you to know I'm perfectly all right for Mr. Brownell to come to see me," she said, when she ushered the youth into the presence of the landlady. "We're going to be married. We're engaged."

Mrs. Potter surveyed the tall, merry-eyed Brownell from her throne, and said she, at length, "I've been taking roomers fifteen years, and this is the first time any girl shows me one of her young men. Shown him on purpose, I mean." She took another look at Brownell. "He could be worse, I suppose."

With this she went back into her room and shut the door.

"Merry old soul, isn't she?" inquired the youth, after a moment's astonished pause.

"She's not so bad," said Molly, leading him toward her own room. "And she does keep such a respectable place!" She threw open her door and stood aside for him to enter.

It was the first time he had visited the girl at her home. He cast a quick glance around the room as he entered, and even after Molly had snuggled into his arms—as they stood, between the dresser and the trunk that flanked the entrance, he looked over her head at her surroundings.

Molly's bed was in the corner. It wasn't a regular bed, with headboard and footboard. It was a broad divan, over which Molly kept a dark cover in the daytime.

A shelf ran from the corner of the bed to the window, about five feet above the floor, and a curtain of blue denim hung from this in stiff folds. Under the curtain Molly kept her clothes; there was no closet in the room. In the corner beyond the window was a table, with a pot of flowers on it; next to this the dresser, and the girl stood, and then the trunk. Two chairs occupied most of the remaining wall space.

"Isn't it lovely, being engaged?" Molly inquired burrowing her head into the young man's shoulder.

"It's great," he assented. But go on, Molly! In this where you've lived for two years?"

She withdrew her head from his coat. It isn't very gaudy, is it?" she said, following him gaze from the dresser to the chairs, and to the worn old carpet. Molly had spent the entire morning—on Sunday—making the room as beautiful as she could, but she did not resent his tone. The apartment wasn't very gaudy. Still, she went on, "I've got more than the other girls. I have the room to myself, you see. It costs a lot more, paying for a whole room this way, but it's worth it, don't you think?"

He drew her to him, tenderly. "Poor little brave kid!" he said, kissing her on the temple. "When we're married you'll have a whole suite of rooms, a bathroom, a living-room and everything, and a kitchen."

She gave a sigh of content and pressed her cheek to his. It was a gorgeous outlook—a long life with Bob Brownell, with suites of rooms, which they would get as soon as they were married, and the automobile that he had already, and nice clothes, and—promise was given in the machine, as it stood outside the door, and an hour later, as she reluctantly left the car to go to her room, they had agreed to spend the Sunday afternoon and evening together.

After this, he came to the room often. Sometimes she made him wait in the hall while she changed her dress, in preparation for dancing or the theatre. Occasionally he came and sat in the bigger of the two chairs all evening and talked until it was so late that Molly's eyelids drooped.

They would have been married at once, except that they agreed there should be enough money in the bank to buy furniture for a flat. "I just couldn't stand living in a furnished apartment after we are married," Molly said. They change so much more, and it just means that you pay for what the boys' furniture, and then it isn't your's after all!"

"Sensible little baby," he said, fondly. She was sitting on his lap at the time. But as soon as we get enough money together between us, you stop work! Do you hear? You'll never pound a typewriter again!"

She twisted a button on his vest. "Just think, Bob," she said. "We're making sixty-five dollars a week—the two of us are. That's more than lots of men make who have big families."

"When I catch my stride, I'll be making twice that, myself," he boasted. "The boss said last week that he didn't have a man that covered the ground I do."

"It's a pity he wouldn't give you a raise, if he feels that way," she retorted, warmly. "I'm sure there isn't a young fellow in town as clever as you, dearest—you ought to be getting a hundred and forty instead of only forty dollars."

Brownell embraced her, in answer to this tribute. "Still, I'm doing better than most fellows," he assured her, as at last she sat more erect and another time he said, "I'm planning ten dollars in the bank every week now—wish I'd started saving money before I met you! I might have had five or six hundred dollars by this time."

"I've got two hundred and five, and twenty-five cents," she said. He grimaced. "You're four times as rich as I am," he calculated. "Some time I think I ought to sell my roadster—it costs me a lot to keep up, and the cash I'd get would be so much velvet."

"Don't sell your lovely car!" she protested. "You need the recreation—really you do, honey, working so hard all day! And I like to ride in it, too!"

SNARED

By MALCOLM DUART

CONCLUSION

"First notion I had that we were twitted was when Smith here ran away from me, this morning," he explained. "I recommended him. He was hanging around here to see Stewart. The game needed money—they wanted to duck out of the country, and Smith figured my brother would donate another thousand or so."

"But why didn't you call the deputies when they were here?"

"Didn't want to. I want my $10,000 reward for myself. I'll need it. Waited until they were gone. Now I'm in and get those strips of sheeting for me. I want to stretch my legs."

Ten minutes later the elder Smith, purple in the face, a deep gasp over his eyes, marks of Bode's fists upon his lips and chin, lay in the pasture, wrapped from neck to ankles in strong bands of cotton cloth. Impartially, he cursed Bode and the girl. Nadine put her fingers in her ears and retreated.

"We'll leave him here for a while," said Bode, satisfied that Smith could not move. Leaving the way, he helped the girl to pass through the hedge and into the kitchen door.

"My brother's going to settle an annuity on Irene," he remarked, as they entered the kitchen door. "He says he owes her something—her and the boy."

"And won't they have to stay in jail?" Nadine let her fingers rest in Bode's.

"Not at all. They're not guilty of anything in particular. Smith hit his father; Irene hit the deputy. Nothing to cause them much future trouble. But the father—Bode stopped in the kitchen to complete the sentence. "He'll go to the penitentiary, likely, for the rest of his life. There are enough other things against him besides this to make certain he won't get much mercy."

"How did you find out what happened in the bootleg place?" the girl asked, detaining him.

"I interviewed Smith," he grinned. "Knelt on his chest, and when he wouldn't answer, I would punch him again. We chatted a good deal, out there in the pasture."

Pierce's voice, in the other room, was raised fretfully.

"Say, you folks—come in here and tell me," he cried.

The man and the girl entered the room. Bode, after a quick and sympathetic examination of Pierce's hirsute, snarling on the edge of the bed and retold the story.

Pierce's eyes were ablaze with excitement before the tale was half told. And Smith? "I made some bad money—at least I did—but it was a good hunch that took me over to that dance hall this morning."

"But how about the missing thumb?" the youth persisted.

"Smith told me—under pressure—that the thumb's been gone for years. I didn't know it; neither did Stewart. I was just here to ask, and it never occurred to me to ask the boy. We all make stupid little omissions, sometimes."

He squared himself on the bed, and took Nadine by the hand.

"There's something else, Pierce," he went on, more slowly. "I've done an injury to Miss Rollins here, and to you, too. I was doing my best—I thought my duty was to my brother and to the boy whom he had asked me to protect. But now—," he stopped, and his eyes flashed that all over. Young Smith is free—or will be to-night—to go where he pleases. Irene is safe. I'll pay her fine for assaulting the sheriff's squad. My brother is cleared. It was Smith himself who threw the blame on Stewart. The real murderer is over there in the pasture, and he'll stay there until I'm ready to move him."

Bode got up, dropped Nadine's hand, and rose to his feet.

"I want to suggest," he said, "that—," you see, you haven't asked Miss Rollins to marry you?"

Pierce's mouth opened. "What?"

"You love her, don't you? You know that there'll be gossip about your both being here!"

Despite his injuries, the youth swung both legs over the side of the bed and sat bolt upright.

"Why," he said, staring at Nadine and then at the man, "if I'll make things easier for Nadine, I'll marry her, sure. But—your see, I'm not in love with her!"

The girl gave a cry. Bode whirled toward her. The cry was not one of anguish, but of pleasure, and she was patting her hands in sheer delight.

"I want to go up north and hunt gold, soon as I'm well," continued Pierce, a note of injury in his tone.

I didn't aim to get married for years and years."

Bode was leaning against the wall, rubbing his forehead with the back of his hand. "I thought," he said, "that you two young people were in love with each other, all the time!"

"We never were," declared Nadine. "I like her," Pierce added, "but that's different. Still, if I ought to marry her, I'll be game."

"You'd do no such thing," the girl spoke with spirit. She looked at Bode, and her eyes fell. "You see," she went on, a smile flickering at the corners of her mouth, "it wasn't Mr. Pierce who got me into this scrape."

She paused, obviously waiting for Bode to speak.

What he said was: "Well!" Pierce, from his place on the edge of the bed, started to laugh. "Go out in the hall, you two, and shut the door!" he commanded. "And when you get there, propose to her yourself, you dummies!"

It was the first time he had ever addressed Bode in such terms, but the man showed no resentment. Instead, he looked at Nadine, a question in his eyes. Then he took her hand again, and led her into the hallway, closing the door as Pierce had instructed.

"I think maybe Pierce was a bit too—too previous," he began.

She drew her hand from his and stood demurely, her fingers locked together.

"Probably I've made a ghastly mess of everything," he tried, again.

"Why?" she inquired.

"You don't want to marry me, do you?" His eyes were pleading.

"Oh you! Why don't you ask me!" She raised her blue eyes. "Why do you suppose I've stayed here all this time? Don't you suppose I could have escaped, if I had really wanted to?"

"Then—" he gulped as he extended his arms—"you would marry me?"

"Of course!" she cried, exultantly. "I wouldn't marry anybody else in the world!"

Thereupon he kissed her, and held her a long time, her hair mussed and gleaming from his chin, his arms tightly about her.

"And," she said, at length, "we'll sit up this dear old place and live here, and—" she giggled rather hysterically—"we'll invite Irene to come to see us! And Charley! And our brother! And Elbert, maybe!"

"Not Elbert!" he said, firmly. "I've had enough of Elbert to last me all my life. Dearest, do you love me?"

"More than everything else there is," she said. "It has been a WONDERFUL week, hasn't it, John dear?"

"I think maybe Pierce was a bit too—too previous," he began.

"Probably I've made a ghastly mess of everything," he tried, again.

"Then—" he gulped as he extended his arms—"you would marry me?"

"Of course!" she cried, exultantly. "I wouldn't marry anybody else in the world!"

Thereupon he kissed her, and held her a long time, her hair mussed and gleaming from his chin, his arms tightly about her.

"And," she said, at length, "we'll sit up this dear old place and live here, and—" she giggled rather hysterically—"we'll invite Irene to come to see us! And Charley! And our brother! And Elbert, maybe!"

"Not Elbert!" he said, firmly. "I've had enough of Elbert to last me all my life. Dearest, do you love me?"

"More than everything else there is," she said. "It has been a WONDERFUL week, hasn't it, John dear?"

"I think maybe Pierce was a bit too—too previous," he began.

"Probably I've made a ghastly mess of everything," he tried, again.

"Why?" she inquired.

"You don't want to marry me, do you?" His eyes were pleading.

"Oh you! Why don't you ask me!" She raised her blue eyes. "Why do you suppose I've stayed here all this time? Don't you suppose I could have escaped, if I had really wanted to?"

"I want to try the MAYTAG"

THOUSANDS of women have made that request. Thousands of housewives have tried the Maytag—in their own homes—on their own washings. They have seen the Maytag do an entire washing in one hour—watched as its turbulent water action washed all clothes clean without hand-rubbing. Everywhere women have proved to their own satisfaction the Maytag's unrivaled washing helpfulness.

FINE EXHIBITS FOR PROVINCIAL FAIR HERE

Provincial Exhibition at Willows Will Have New Accommodation for Many More Animals; Show Will Be Opened on Monday Next

With the opening of the Provincial Exhibition at the Willows in a week's time and the closing of entry lists completed, Saturday, authorities are commencing to arrive at approximate figures which show that the exhibits are greatly increased over previous years. For the sheep, always an interesting branch of the livestock exhibit, extra accommodation has had to be arranged and a pen measuring 200 feet by 63 feet, which will hold 200 additional animals, is planned. This increase in the sheep exhibit is taken as an indication of the growing interest in sheep farming on Vancouver Island generally.

Other sectional exhibits, such as goats, rabbits and poultry have filled up well with high grade stock. All are managed by individual fanciers' associations, in co-operation with the fair management.

Additional stabling will be provided for goats, 100 more hutches for the rabbit breeders, and poultry lines will be lengthened and strengthened. In the main building the manufacturers' exhibits will be carried if they overflow from the Manufacturers' Building. Among exhibitors in the latter will be the following: David Spencer Limited, Kelly-Douglas & Company, Weller Furniture Company, Sidney Roofing and Paper Company, Bennis & Taylor Bakery, Moore-Whitington Lumber Company, Victoria Ginger Ale Company, B.C. Electric Railway, Vancouver Island Hardwood Floor Company, W. A. Jameson Coffee Company, Evans, Coleman & Evans Limited, Western Canada Radio Supply, Blue Ribbon Tea, Hudson's Bay Company, Shelly's Limited, Canadian Institute for the Blind, A. E. Taylor & Company and J. H. Connor.

Horticultural exhibits will also be housed in the Main Building and are expected to be bigger and better than ever. Dominion and Provincial Governments will place horticultural and agricultural exhibits in this building. Among exhibitors are W. H. Malkin Company, J. Wood, Murphy Electric Company, Tuckers Limited, Our Own Brand Butter, Singer Sewing Machine Company, E. G. Prior & Company, J. Curren of Indianapolis, Hawkins & Hayward, Mrs. Austler of San Francisco, Frederick Smith, J. E. Robertson, T. K. Wood and Mrs. Hind, Los Angeles.

It is understood that there will be no room for the wonderful forestry model of Vancouver Island at present being displayed in the Vancouver Exhibition.

The Women's Building in addition to women's institute exhibits, will also contain an exceptional collection of fine arts.
